

HISTORY

The park originally opened in 1961, as Flagler Beach State Recreation Area. It was later renamed to honor the memory of Gamble Rogers, a native Floridian who lost his life trying to save a drowning swimmer at the beach in 1991. Rogers sang songs and told stories about Florida. After his death, he was honored with many awards including a Kiwanis Award for bravery, a Carnegie Award for heroism, and a Florida Folk Heritage Award. He was inducted into the Florida Artists Hall of Fame in 1998.

In 1886, a House of Refuge was established here. In 1942 during WWII, the U.S. Army Air Corps established an air warning site to monitor and detect hostile submarine and air activity along this section of Florida's coast.

EXPERIENCES AND AMENITIES

Relax, play and camp at Gamble Rogers Memorial State Recreation Area at Flagler Beach. This 145-acre park is located on a barrier island and is named for the late Florida folk singer and storyteller Gamble Rogers.

Nestled between the Atlantic Ocean and the Intracoastal Waterway, this windswept park's beach offers sun bathing and beachcombing. Swim and play in the surf of the Atlantic Ocean. Build castles in the sand. Watch pelicans ride the updrafts along the dunes and ocean waves.

Surf fish along the beach or wet a line in the Intracoastal Waterway. Launch your own kayak to explore the marsh. A ramp at the boat basin gives access to the Intracoastal Waterway.

Bicycle, jog or walk on the sidewalk that runs the length of Flagler Beach along A1A. Hike the three-quarter mile Joe Kenner Nature Trail and experience the plant and animal life in the shady maritime hammock. Picnic at one of the many sheltered tables.

The park's 68 campsites feature water, electric, a picnic table and a fire ring. Some of the Beachside Camping Area sites provide an ocean view, and dune walkovers provide easy access to the beach while protecting the fragile dune system. The Riverside Camping Area is located in the edge of the maritime hammock and includes four tent-only campsites.

At night from May through September, endangered and threatened sea turtles crawl on the beach to nest and lay their eggs. A part of the Great Florida Birding trail, the park provides many opportunities for bird watching all year. The beach is a feeding place for sandpipers, gulls and other shore birds. The restored saltwater marsh on the west side of A1A offers a view of herons, egrets and manatees. Woodpeckers and songbirds frequent the nature trail.
